

KEY FACTS ON FAMILY FOUNDATIONS

Grantmaker Data, 2006

The Foundation Center has identified 37,100 independent foundations with measurable donor or donor-family involvement. These “family foundations” represent more than half of all independent foundations and account for similar shares of independent foundations’ giving, assets, and new gifts and bequests from donors. If all of the nation’s family foundations could be identified, these shares would undoubtedly rise.¹

¹Family foundations are not legally distinct from other independent foundations, requiring the Foundation Center to identify them using several objective and subjective criteria. These criteria include independent foundations with “family” or “families” in their name, a living donor whose surname matches the foundation name, or at least two trustee surnames that match a living or deceased donor’s name, along with any independent foundations that self-identify as family foundations on annual Foundation Center surveys.

Giving Patterns, 2006

Larger family foundations included in the Foundation Center's 2006 grants sample¹ were more likely to provide funding for health, education, the environment and animals, and religion than independent foundations overall. They were less likely to give for human services, arts and culture, public affairs/society benefit, international affairs, science, and the Chart includes selected beneficiary groups representing at least 1 percent of family foundation grant dollars. Figures represent only grants awarded to groups that could be identified as serving specific populations or grants whose descriptions specified a benefit for a specific population. These figures do not reflect all giving benefiting these groups. In addition, grants may benefit multiple population groups, e.g., a grant for homeless children, and would therefore be counted more than once.

15 percent of larger family foundations reported having paid staff in 2007, but shares varied by size
